[R. B. Burroughs in the Jacksonville Times-Union.] Several years ago the city editor of the Times-Union published an article by my pen on this subject. The recent article in the Times-Union is a sad story of loss of life at Pablo and other seaside resorts, and the dangerous waters of the St. John's shore. The advice given was unheeded or forgotten. The time mentioned a beloved friend, who had been to the place a few miles from Pablo, while bathing was carried out to sea and then slipped out of sight and all hope to us had fled (an unrecognized brother bringing their hands and weeping). I was so surprised and suddenly saw his body impaled miserably toward us; then we saw it recede a few feet and then again, as it were, a few feet more. The body was there. This continued until my son and myself, at last able to reach him, bore

ing all hope, guided by some ous impulse, he had turned back, when he felt himself over upon his face to get his bearings. He is not a swimmer, and he is in the land, and on again placing his hands upon his back the surface waves break his hands and he is again rescued man. It is an error that a drowning man is attacked by crabs and eels. Also, it is an error that a man drowns from heart failure, induced by the violent exertion and the upward pressure of the waves. The waves do not diminish the space and impeding the action of the heart. The only danger is that if the surface is removed, the back being almost free, a strong wall of bone and the surface waves tend toward the shore. The waves are not so strong as the legs, when upon the back, but less exposed to the current that time would be spent in the water. When upon the back the heart, relieved of pressure, becomes calm and quiet, and the waves are not so strong and float for hours. The bather who is heart is weak should always presume to swim on his back. The waves lift his body to the waves, and thus save the Sullivan-like blows of the incoming waves. The waves are not so strong every bath-house should be posted to infundation: "In case of a shamoon accident, turn upon the back."

DOTS AND DASHES.

"Dope" Hidden.

Two typical brake-beam hoboes were arrested last night in the river bed near San Fernando street and booked at the Police Station on suspicion. Both appeared to be "dope" fiends, but a cursory examination of their clothing failed to reveal any of the drug or hypodermic needles, but, however, quantities of opium, morphine and other drugs were found adroitly hidden in their arm-pits, and about other portions of their anatomy.

Stolen Chickens.

Two young rogues entered the chicken yard of J. N. Plummer on Downey avenue, in N. Hollywood, on August 24, and purloined five of the fowls. The householder saw the deed done and next day issued a warrant for the arrest of the boys, but meantime they had departed from the city. They returned to the city last week and were arrested yesterday. The youthful thieves are James Cinghena and Louis Plummer, respectively, 14 and 15 years. They are now in the City Jail.

Good Dove-Hunting.

This is proving to be a glorious season for dove hunters. The birds are unusually plentiful, and are not wild. A few days ago two gentlemen from this city drove up through San Fernando Valley and shot 300 birds in one day, they hardly leaving the wagon. Doves are found in plenty this year at Balboa and the surrounding district and all through the San Fernando. Every Sunday from the Long Beach train, hunters can be seen in the meadow lands just south of the County Farm, popping dove after dove.

Patient Wife.

James J. Purcell, who resides on Soto street, was arrested yesterday morning and lodged in the City Jail, charged with beating his wife. Mrs. Purcell's spouse caused his apprehension, but by afternoon she had repented of her severity and appeared at the Police Station seeking to gain her husband's release. When told that he would have to be in jail until next Wednesday before he could be tried, owing to the first days of the week being public holidays, Mrs. Purcell was grief-stricken. She was then released, and the woman departed to search for the necessary coin. Later in the afternoon a couple of "cops" came to the station and put up the coin.

BOYS "SCOOPED."

Father Avers They Were Kidnaped.

An Older Brother Took Them Yesterday.

Singular Complications in the Family of M. Griffin of Los Angeles.

The Southern Pacific train which pulled out of Los Angeles yesterday afternoon, bound north, left behind it a fabled husband. It carried most of the actors in act one of the domestic tragedy of M. Griffin of the Merchants' and Bankers' Collection Agency of this city. Act two will take place wherever and whenever M. Griffin can catch the retreating dramatic personae of act one.

Griffin wants his wife, from whom he is separated, and his son arrested; he claims they are kidnapers. The son has asked that Griffin be arrested, on general principles. The police refused to be enthusiastic in either case. Nobody has been arrested.

It is a curious story as it came floating into the police in detached fragments.

First, Griffin, the son, arrived on the scene several days ago. He wanted the assistance of the police in getting possession of his two small brothers, who he said they were in the possession of his father, M. Griffin, the father.

According to his story, his father and mother have been living apart for some time, having parted because of Griffin's infatuation for another woman in this city. His mother, who now lives with him in Oakland, is unwilling to have her two young children raised in such surroundings.

Griffin, Jr., said that he was willing to spend $500 to get possession of the children. The police would do nothing for him, of course, so he went away.

Before leaving the station he offered to hire a special officer. All the specials were busy, so he was recommended to a private detective.

He made a good job of it. The police officials understood him to say that he was a tutor at the University of California. He told Capt. Hensley that he was connected with mining work, and that he was sure that the children were in the hands of a man named "Griffin."

Day before yesterday he made a second appearance at the station. He said that he had telegraphed his mother to come to Oakland and wanted an officer to go out with them to the Griffin house to preserve order. He stated his belief to be that the children would come with the mother, and seemed to be usually sure that the children would be a row.

His request was again refused. The police told him that they had no right to interfere, but advised him to go ahead and, if trouble arose, they would rally and smooth down the ruffian Griffin.

About 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon Griffin the elder put in appearance. He was in a state of agitation. He said that he had sent the two little boys to Sunday school, and they had failed to return. He suspected that his son had something to do with it.

THE LAND OF PROMISE.

Striking Achievements of the State's First Half Century of Life.

CALIFORNIA is the only State in the Union, outside of the original thirteen British colonial States, that never had any territorial government. Hence the appropriateness of the figure of Minerva on the great seal of the State. She was called to the United States by Mexico as a reward for the expenses growing out of the Mexican war, by a treaty framed at Guadalupe Hidalgo, in 1848, and was under military provisional government until May, 1849, when Gen. Bennett Riley, military governor, appointed the first day of August for an election for delegates to a constitutional convention to be held at Monterey on the 1st day of September. The convention met according to proclamation, framed a State constitution and adjourned on the 13th of October. A general election for Governor, State officers and members of the Legislative Assembly, was held November 11, and the Legislature met at San Jose on the 10th of December. On the 20th, Peter H. Burnett was inaugurated as Governor and John McDougal as Lieutenant Governor. Shortly after his inauguration, Gov. Burnett resigned, and McDougal became Governor. He appointed Mr. Burnett as one of the Justices of the Supreme Court, then three in number.

The first Senators elected were William M. Gwin, formerly United States Marshal for Mississippi, and John C. Fremont, a retired captain of the regular army. This was the work of David C. Broderick, who could have been elected then and there had he so desired. But what he wanted was to have the State admitted at once; and so he caused the election of Gwin, of his own party, and Fremont, a Whig, that each would labor with Congress for the admission of the State. On the 9th day of September, 1850, Congress passed the act of admission, and the good news was brought by the steamer Oregon, of the Pacific Mail Company, arriving on the 18th day of October. The more notable events of the next fifty years are here narrated.

1850. The square known in all Mexican archives and expedients as "La Plaza," was officially designated as Fortunate Square, in honor of the United States frigate Portsmouth, which lay in the harbor at the time that Gen. Riley had issued his proclamation for the preliminary steps toward the formation of a State; and as he was commanded by Capt. Montgomery, the principal street of the new city then at the water's edge all the way from Jackson to Sacramento street, was named for him. Lieutenant (whose daughter's diamond wedding ring was the Cuban mulatto, Orville, created such excitement in 1841), was the American Alcalde, appointed by Commodore Stockton. He was afterwards elected over José Jesus Noe, and one of his first official acts was to correct the inaccurate surveys of the city made by Vincent, who first took the village. Jasper O'Farrell, for whom O'Farrell street is named, was selected to make the new surveys. There was more or less trouble over the old street surveys till as late as 1851.

In January, Stephen J. Field, afterwards celebrated as one of the Justices of the Supreme Court, was elected Alcalde of the city of Marysville. He was elected to the Legislature in the year following; and the statutes, of which he was the

SORRY SIGHTS

Seen at the Los Angeles Police Station on Sunday—The Map and the Woman.

The man who had expiated his offense looked around the Police Station and shivered at the bleakness. There were various shades of desolation. There are swamps with ghost lights and hooting night birds; there are solitary castles upon the sea, and lonely caverns that know not the light of day. But these are all comparatively cheerful.

Then, there is a police station on Sunday. That is not cheerful. So the man shivered and turned to the police clerk, begging him, with his eyes, to hurry. He was white and wan with the prison pallor, and the unaccustomed lack of stimulant left him weak and trembling. He needed whisky.

"Guess you was kind of broke this trip," said the clerk, with a wealth of human sympathy, but no grammar to spare. "He handed him out an old railroad time table and a dejected-looking pocket watch."

"Not a bean," said the man. "The man leaned against the counter for support and thought it over. 'Say,' he said, as much with his dry pleading eyes as his lips. 'Say, I wish you'd just look again and see if you can find some dough. Look for Hammond.'"

"Hammond?" said the clerk. "We got you down for Hannon. You said your name was Hannon."

"Did I?" said the penitent. "Well, maybe I did, then. But there ain't any money."

"No," said the clerk. "And the man walked away with his knees staggering under him. But it's the woman who must suffer. When the big, strong arm of the law lays a man for his sins, some woman's heart suffers under every blow."

Yesterday a forlorn little woman came peeping timidly into the Police Station. A woman. She was hardly more than a girl. She wore a home-made gown that blighted at being a tailor. It didn't fit across the shoulders, and the skirt lining was all askew. It was so much more pitiful than she though she had been in rags. Her gloves were out at the fingers and she tried to hide the holes. Which were pitiful, too.

She wanted to get her husband out of jail on bail. She said she had the money. "Let's see," said the big official. "He was brought in here for battery."

"Yes," said the girl, all a-flutter with fright. The officer looked at her keenly. "He's in for battery on you?"

The girl colored and looked down, but did not answer. The official explained to her kindly how the law works. He said that if she had treated him as he has you, I shouldn't want to get him out."

"I can't bear to think of his being in prison," faltered the girl. She saw in the eyes of the official that it was no use pleading to him. If he had treated me as he has you, I shouldn't want to get him out."

The Chinaman in the wash-house noticed the sick man, but paid little attention to him, and he was permitted to remain in the street. A passing citizen notified the Police Station. An officer was sent to the place and the patrol wagon was summoned, but the hapless castaway died before assistance reached him.

The Coroner was notified, and the body was removed to Garrett's undertaking establishment on North Main street, where Dr. E. H. Garrett will perform an autopsy this morning. The dead man bore no signs of violence, and his demise was probably due to natural causes. He was about 40 years of age and from appearance was a laborer, presumably in one of the vegetable gardens south of the city. On his person were found $7 in cash and a quantity of opium. The theory is that an excessive use of that drug produced the deadly illness.

The Chinaman in the locality all denied any knowledge as to the deceased. Some "devil" had taken possession of him, and his fellows therefore refused to in any way interfere with whatever course the demon should follow. An inquest will be held this afternoon.

Don't. [Cleveland Plain Dealer:] Don't forget to keep to the right, whether riding or walking. Don't elbow people, or, if you do it unwillingly, excuse yourself. Don't stare at people or laugh at their peculiarities. Don't carry your cane or umbrella so as to render it dangerous. Don't occupy any more space in a car than you are entitled to. Don't talk at the theater or concert while the performance is going on. Don't apologize when you shake hands with your gloves on. Don't forget to render all necessary services to any one in need of them. Don't be in haste to introduce. Find out first if it is mutually agreeable. Don't rush for a seat in a car or theater. Don't tell stories of a doubtful character. Don't interrupt; don't contradict; don't quarrel; don't tell long stories; even when asked to. Don't use slang phrases.
